Surrealist Explorations in Writing and Painting

Ducornet's writing is characterized by its dreamlike, hallucinatory quality. Her novels, such as "The Stain" and "The Word Tree," are filled with bizarre imagery, haunting characters, and a deep exploration of the subconscious mind.

In her paintings, Ducornet employs a similar surrealist aesthetic. Her canvases are populated by strange creatures, floating objects, and fragmented bodies. The colors are often vibrant and discordant, creating a sense of unease and disorientation.

Ducornet's surrealism is not merely an artistic style; it is a way of understanding the world. She sees reality as a complex and elusive construct, and her art seeks to expose the hidden layers beneath the surface.

Symbolism and Mythology

Symbolism plays a central role in Ducornet's work. She often uses objects, animals, and colors to represent abstract ideas and emotions. For example, the tree is a recurring symbol in her writing and painting, representing both life and death, growth and decay.

Ducornet also draws heavily on mythology in her work. She sees myths as universal stories that can help us understand our own lives and experiences. In her novel "Entering Fire," she reinterprets the myth of Orpheus and Eurydice, exploring themes of love, loss, and the power of art.

Autobiography and Feminism

While Ducornet's work is often surreal and fantastical, it is also deeply rooted in autobiography. Her writing and painting explore her own experiences as a woman, a survivor of trauma, and an artist. She often uses her art to process her personal experiences and to challenge societal norms.

Ducornet is a strong advocate for feminism, and her work often explores the challenges and triumphs of women. She creates complex female characters who are both vulnerable and resilient, and she challenges traditional gender roles and stereotypes.

The Creative Process

Ducornet's creative process is as unique and enigmatic as her artwork. She often begins by creating collages, which she then uses as inspiration for her writing and painting. She believes that collage allows her to break free from traditional forms and to access her subconscious mind.

Ducornet also draws inspiration from her dreams, her travels, and her encounters with other artists. She is a voracious reader, and her work is influenced by a wide range of literature, philosophy, and art history.
