The book begins with Ming and her poppy playing together in the garden. They are best friends, and Ming loves her poppy very much. But one day, the poppy dies, and Ming is heartbroken. She doesn't know what to do or how to feel. She is so sad that she can't even cry.

Ming's friends try to help her, but nothing they say or do seems to make her feel better. Finally, Ming's grandmother takes her to the garden and tells her about the cycle of life. She explains that all things must die, but that new life will always come again. Ming's grandmother also tells her that the poppy will always be with her, in her heart.

Ming is comforted by her grandmother's words, and she begins to feel a little better. She knows that her poppy is gone, but she also knows that she will always have her memories of him. And she knows that one day, she will see him again.

Ming and Her Poppy is a touching and heartwarming story about loss, love, and the healing power of nature. This book is a must-read for any child who has experienced loss or is struggling with difficult emotions.
