Early Life and Career

Annette Laing was born in 1960 in rural New Zealand. Her parents were farmers, and she grew up in a small town. Laing attended the University of Canterbury, where she earned a degree in law. After graduating, she worked as a lawyer and then as a policy advisor for the Treasury. In 1996, she was elected to Parliament as a member of the National Party.

Political Career

Laing served in Parliament for nine years. During that time, she held a number of ministerial positions, including Minister of Women's Affairs and Minister of Commerce. She was also a member of the cabinet. Laing was a controversial figure during her time in politics. She was known for her strong opinions and her willingness to speak her mind. She also made a number of enemies, both within her own party and among the opposition.

Return to Business

In 2005, Laing resigned from Parliament to return to business. She joined ANZ Bank as a director and was appointed chair in 2009. Under Laing's leadership, ANZ Bank became one of the most successful banks in New Zealand. She also played a key role in the bank's expansion into Asia.

Legacy

Annette Laing is a pioneering figure in New Zealand business and politics. She is one of the few women to have held the position of chair of a major bank. She is also a former politician and a member of the cabinet. Laing's journey from politics to power is an inspiration to women everywhere.

Annette Laing is a remarkable woman who has achieved great success in both politics and business. She is an inspiration to women everywhere and a role model for those who aspire to leadership positions.
