That's where this guide comes in. In this guide, we'll cover everything you need to know to dominate your fantasy football league in 2023. We'll start with the basics, like how to draft a team and how to set your lineup. Then, we'll move on to more advanced topics, like how to trade players and how to manage your team during the season.

Drafting Your Team

The draft is the most important part of fantasy football. It's where you'll select the players who will make up your team for the season. So it's important to do your research and know which players to target.

When drafting your team, there are a few things you'll want to keep in mind:

- Positional scarcity: Some positions are more valuable than others in fantasy football. For example, quarterbacks are more valuable than running backs, and running backs are more valuable than wide receivers. So you'll want to make sure to draft players at the positions that are most valuable.
- Player value: Not all players are created equal. Some players are more talented than others, and some players have better matchups than others. So you'll want to do your research and identify the players who are the most valuable.
- Team needs: You'll also want to consider your team's needs when drafting your team. For example, if you need a quarterback, then you'll want to draft a quarterback early on. Or, if you need a running back, then you'll want to draft a running back early on.

Once you've done your research and identified the players you want to target, you'll need to start drafting your team. The draft order will be determined by a random draw, so you won't know which pick you'll have until the draft starts.

When it's your turn to pick, you'll need to decide which player you want to draft. You'll want to consider the factors we discussed earlier, such as positional scarcity, player value, and team needs.

Once you've drafted your team, you'll need to set your lineup. Your lineup will consist of the players who will start for you each week. You'll want to consider the following factors when setting your lineup:

- Player matchups: Some players have better matchups than others each week. So you'll want to start the players who have the best matchups.
- Player injuries: If a player is injured, then you won't be able to start them. So you'll need to check the injury report each week and make sure that your players are healthy.
- Team bye weeks: Each team has a bye week during the season. During a bye week, a team doesn't play a game. So you won't be able to start any players from that team during their bye week.

Once you've considered all of these factors, you'll be ready to set your lineup for the week.

Managing Your Team

Once you've drafted your team and set your lineup, you'll need to manage your team during the season. This includes making waiver wire claims, trading players, and setting your lineup each week.

The waiver wire is a list of players who are not currently on any fantasy football teams. You can claim players off the waiver wire if you think they can help your team. When making waiver wire claims, you'll need to consider the following factors:

- Player value: You'll want to claim players who have the potential to help your team. So you'll want to consider the player's talent, their matchup, and their team's schedule.
- Waiver wire priority: Each team has a waiver wire priority. The team with the highest priority gets to claim players off the waiver wire first. So you'll want to make sure that you have a high waiver wire priority if you want to claim the best players.

Trading players is another way to improve your team. You can trade players with other teams in your league. When trading players, you'll need to consider the following factors:

- Player value: You'll want to trade players who you think can help your team. So you'll want to consider the player's talent, their matchup, and their team's schedule.
- Team needs: You'll also want to consider your team's needs when trading players. For example, if you need a quarterback, then you'll want to trade for a quarterback.
- Trade value: You'll also need to consider the trade value of each player. Some players are more valuable than others, so you'll need to make sure that you're getting a fair deal.

Setting your lineup each week is also an important part of managing your team. You'll want to consider the following factors when setting your lineup:

- Player matchups: Some players have better matchups than others each week. So you'll want to start the players who have the best matchups.

- Player injuries: If a player is injured, then you won't be able to start them. So you'll need to check the injury report each week and make sure that your players are healthy.
- Team bye weeks: Each team has a bye week during the season. During a bye week, a team doesn't play a game. So you won't be able to start any players from that team during their bye week.

By following the tips in this guide, you'll be well on your way to dominating your fantasy football league in 2023.
